Warm are the lears, sincerely shied,
McMahon, o'er thy fallen head,
And while the lightning and the Press
Tell to the world its lowliness,
Few are the hearts that will not swell.
Responsively to such a knell!
The land your sword was drawn to save,
Now sighs above her soldlers' grave;
The Press your virtues dignified
Stands with fair flowers at her side;
The slusses whom your genius woosed,
Weeping, come up 'rom every wood,
While Powerty, with wringing hands,
And cheek toriorn, among them stands,
Crying, "To whom the poor were dear"Nature's own nobleman lies here!"
And Priendship sobs, "I kne whim well.
"From secial hour to hattle's knell,
"A purer heart, a braver soul
"Make way!" Religion soitly cries,
With heavenly smile and lifted eyes,
"He is not deal—they cannot die,
"Who thus write their own history!" BY J. W. HOGERS.
